

CALL FOR PAPERS

NAKPA panel

at the

Diverse Lineages of Existentialism II: Critical Race, Feminist, & Continental Philosophy Conference

<https://dleii.com/>

George Washington University, Washington DC JUNE 3-5, 2019

We are pleased to announce that the North American Korean Philosophy Association (NAKPA) will participate in the second Diverse Lineages of Existentialism conference that will take place at George Washington University, Washington DC, June 3-5, 2019. For details about the conference, visit the conference website: <https://dleii.com/>

We invite submissions that explore topics related to existentialism and diversity in Korean philosophy, including: (1) existential dimensions of Korean philosophy: How are self and other defined in Korean philosophy? How are human conditions understood in Korean philosophy? What are their promises and limitations? How are Korean forms of existentialism distinctive from other existential traditions? Is there tension between the two? (2) Korean reception of existential philosophy: How was existential philosophy received by Korean philosophers? What were the appeal of existential philosophy for Korean thinkers and how did they creatively engage themselves with existentialism? (3) diversity: How does Korean philosophy engage with or hinder diversity? Are there Korean philosophical traditions that are conducive to the encouragement of diversity? How is conformism understood in Korean philosophical traditions in individual and socio-political contexts and how do Korean philosophers respond to it? What would be Korean and comparative philosophy's contribution to the current discourse on diversity? (4) How does Korean philosophy deal with gender, power, human frailty, a remedy for human weakness, and lived experience?

Submit your proposal that includes: (1) Title of your paper; (2) Name, Institutional affiliation, position, and email address; (3) 300 word abstract to Jin Y. Park (jypark@american.edu) by October 15, 2018.